

COMMUNICATION TOOLS FOR TEAM AND CLIENT COLLABORATION

1. Why we use WhatsApp for communication within our group

Our group chose WhatsApp as our primary internal communication platform because it fits the way we already work together day-to-day. Almost every group member already has WhatsApp on their phone and uses it regularly, so there's no need to learn a new platform or having to set it up. This means messages, calls, updates and quick clarifications can happen instantly without anyone needing to log in to a new tool.

WhatsApp also has group chats, supports voice notes and file sharing, which allows us to handle everything from short check-ins to quick sharing of screenshots or documents. Notifications are lightweight and mobile-friendly, so even when we're away from our computers we can stay connected and respond quickly. In short, WhatsApp lets us communicate in real time, informally but efficiently, with the least friction for the team.

2. Why we use Discord to communicate with the client

For our interactions with the client we decided on Discord rather than WhatsApp. Discord gives us a slightly more structured environment and a clearer separation between our internal conversations and client facing communication. With Discord we can create a dedicated channel for us to communicate solely with a client when needed.

It also provides better tools for hosting scheduled calls, screen sharing, and sharing larger files than WhatsApp does. This is especially useful when we're walking the client through new features, gathering feedback, or running live demos. By keeping client communication on Discord, we maintain a professional yet accessible space for them to reach us, while protecting the privacy and informality of our internal WhatsApp chats.
